

Aubrey Matshiqi was a Senior Research Associate at the Centre for Policy (CPS) until March 2011, and is now a research fellow at the Helen Suzman Foundation.

He is also a research fellow at the Stellenbosch Institute for Advanced Study (STIAS). At CPS he specialised in South African politics with a special focus on the ANC and the Alliance, the realignment of opposition political politics, electoral system reform and the state of democracy in South Africa.

At STIAS he has done research on historical memory and politics in post-apartheid South Africa. He writes a weekly column for Business Day and a monthly column for Engineering News. Academic and research institutions, foreign embassies, political parties and private companies use his services as a political analyst.

He is also the author of the e-book titled The Zuma Moment and the Road to Mangaung.
