

EMILY LANDAU

Emily Landau is a senior research associate at the Institute for National Security Studies, where she is also director of the Arms Control and Regional Security Project. She has published and lectured extensively on nuclear proliferation and arms control efforts in the Middle East, proliferation challenges in the post-Cold War world with particular emphasis on Iran and North Korea, Israel's nuclear image and policy, and developments in global arms control thinking in the nuclear realm.

She is co-author of Israel's Nuclear Image: Arab Perceptions of Israel's Nuclear Posture, author of Egypt and Israel in ACRS: Bilateral Concerns in a Regional Arms Control Process, and co-editor of Building Regional Security in the Middle East: International, Regional and Domestic Influences. Her most recent book is Arms Control in the Middle East: Cooperative Security Dialogue and Regional Constraints (Sussex Academic Press, 2006). She is completing a comparative study of diplomatic initiatives to confront the nuclear ambitions of Iran and North Korea.

Dr. Landau is a frequent commentator to Israeli and international media on her topics of expertise. She teaches arms control at Tel Aviv University and in the International School at the University of Haifa. She is also an active participant in Track II initiatives on regional security in the Middle East. She holds a Ph.D. from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem.
